Customer Reviews

I am a huge fan of Steve Chandler and loved The Prosperous Coach, which he co-authored with Rich Litvin. In fact, I received a free copy of the book for review, as I have for his past books, and I am extremely grateful to his publisher. The Prosperous Coach was eye-opening, fresh and powerful, and it also covered useful insights and details and practical tips for the reader to take action on. I had hoped that this book was also well-thought-out and insightful. Sadly, this book was a huge let-down. It was more a rehash of random ideas without much coherence in between the sections all put together in a hurry. In fact, it's a great title for a couple of long detailed blog posts but it's not enough material or context for a book. I know that the author loves to put out books and comes from a great place of passion and service, but this book isn't really covering any one strong premise. Here were my main disappointments with the book:- It is a rushed book, rushed "chapters" which are all 2-3 pages, and random ideas.- A rehash of some of what is in The Prosperous Coach but in short unexplored bursts.- Unclear. Sometimes, I have no idea what reference the author is making.- The inspiration is more like a beat-you-in-the-head-until-you-get-it approach. It could be more powerful and more effective.- The 17 lies section is more a "link bait" title than the actual lies that I could find much relevance to. Irrelevant and inapplicable in most parts. I am giving it a 3-stars because Steve Chandler's ideas, along with the work I've been doing with my own business coach, have really revamped my career coaching practice. If it were the only book I had read by the author, I'd probably be tempted to give it a 2-stars.
