This book is an appetizer for the main course I suggest you pick up, "How to Deliver a Great TED Talk" from the same author.

The premise of this book is that the best speakers on the TED stage were the ones who had mastered the art of storytelling. The first 30 seconds are critical. Opening with a story is a tested and proven method for grabbing audience attention and keeping your audience mentally engaged. As a rule, TED Talks are limited to 18 minutes. This gives the speaker only enough time to share one main idea. If my audience was to forget everything else I said, what one single idea or lesson would I want them to remember? Karia says that the secret to an irresistible story is conflict. As long as there are two strong, opposing forces that make the outcome of the story uncertain, a story will be gripping. It keeps us engaged. It keeps us curious. The author writes about creating a mental motion picture for your audience. Engaging an audience is more than just giving important information | Patricia Fripp, an executive speech coach, says, "People don't remember what you say as much as they remember what they see when you say it." Providing descriptions of the five senses can help your audience to create a mental motion picture of your characters and stories. How does it look, sound, smell, feel, or taste? Being specific adds credibility. Non-specific statements such as "the man was tall" don't help your audience members picture the characters and the scene in their mind. Saying, "He was about 6 foot 5, with ripped muscles" provides enough detail for your audience to be able to see the characters and the scene. Personal stories add authenticity. When you talk about events that have taken place in your life, you will naturally feel some of the emotions that you felt when those events took place.
